I disliked that Wong uses a business analogy to compare classroom management to operating a restaurant. Wong states that most people “accept my analogy [because] that is their work-world. They all come from or work in an environment that is organized” (Gill, 2015). Although it maybe true that most people (or at least most of the people that he has encountered), it does not mean that this is how our world should operate. Wong definition of effective and efficient is based on an industrial

Management vs Discipline - Weebly

Decades ago, a world - renown educational philosopher, Harry K. Wong defined classroom management as, "the practises and procedures that allow teachers to teach and students to learn" (Starr, 2005). Harry K. Wong also describes that classroom managements is something that refers to all of the necessary things that a teacher does to organize students, space, time, and materials so that learning can occur efficiently.
